

Christine King Lockert

Christine received her BS and MS in Natural Resources from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. She worked as coordinator of the Great Plains Cooperative Ecosystem Studies Unit in the School of Natural Resources for 10 years before joining the Center in the fall of 2010. Christine coordinates all aspects of the grant process for the center, including pre- and full-proposals, invoicing and reporting. She also coordinates meetings and training sessions for the Center.

Christine and her husband Eric, a high school math teacher and coach, live in Lincoln with their two children Eli and Norah. Life is busy going to activities such as sporting events and dance. In her spare time, Christine enjoys reading, running, music, and spending time with family and friends.
